THE COMING FOURTH.

How New York will Celebrate.

PREPARATIONS ON AN EXTENSIVE SCALE.

The Celebrations Elsewhere.

New York, July 1. The preparations for celebrating the fourth of July in this city and in Brooklyn are on the grandest scale known in this vicinity.

The processions in both cities on the night of the fourth will comprise the military, the fire companies, the cavalry and artillery battalions, on foot with torches, and all singing societies, etc. German organizations, as well as all kind of other clubs, will also be present.

The churches of Trinity and Grace Churches in this city and of the old and new Saint Ann's in Brooklyn, and bells of the Protestant Churches will ring in the Centennial year of Independence.

The bells of the Catholic Churches will not be rung.

The Decorations.

Great numbers of public buildings, warehouses and private residences are already profusely decorated with flags, streamers and banniers, and by Monday morning the city will be a sea of red, white and blue.

There are hundreds of buildings in this city to-day the whole fronts of which are completely hidden by countless flags and banniers, and the city is a sea of red, white and blue.

On Monday night there will be a general illumination of both cities as has never known before. Business will be generally suspended at noon to-day and little more will be done except at retail groceries until next Thursday.

The stock, gold, produce and other markets will be closed on Wednesday and the brokers and merchants generally anticipate but the slightest transactions on that day.

The procession in this city will carry at least 15,000 torches. No horses will be allowed in the procession. At midnight will form a solid mass in Union Square, every building upon which will have a lantern to every pane of glass, a total of over a million of lights.

The main body of the procession will be composed of the various societies, numbering a thousand youths, in patriotically rendered uniforms, and other national youths, Gen. Shaler, Col. Howe and other well known citizens have charge of the procession and parade.

At Brooklyn, the programme for Monday night is almost a duplicate of that in this city, and the procession and all arrangements are under the command of Major General James Johnson.

The ushering in of the day will be on Fort Greene, once an earthwork built by the Continental Army, and the Long Island culminated at this place. The procession will be massed at midnight.

Crowds of strangers arriving. The city is crowded with strangers. The Fall River and Shore boats, the Hartford, Bridgeport, Norwalk and New Haven boats all arrived to-day, and the crowds of strangers are expected to be at least 10,000.

The celebration virtually began. New York, July 3. P. M. All the steam whistles down town are screaming the signal for evening work. The bells are chiming and the celebration may be said to be virtually begun.

In the center is a scene of the Declaration of Independence, and the signatures, and surrounding this are pictures of interesting events that have happened during the nation's existence.

The work is finely executed and measures 20 by 30 inches. It is replete with historic interest and will be very highly appreciated by every loyal and patriotic citizen.

A higher purpose attends this picture. The author proposes that the net gain on this picture with the approval of the City of Philadelphia, and under the auspices of the Centennial, shall be appropriated to make buildings in that city.

The buildings then erected, and the result shows it. The object is endorsed by President Grant and many of the leading men in the country issued by the Boston Publishing Co., 68 Federal Street, Boston.
